

Student Reflections:

The following is a worksheet I had my piano students fill out. I asked them six questions pertaining to learning the piano in hopes that I could reach some kind of conclusion about the way they each learn as individuals, and if I could change my teaching style according to those results. I thought it would a good exercise for them to reflect on themselves in terms of music. Following each of the worksheets is my own reflection on their responses. I thought it would be especially because I have students of all ages: 7, 8, 9, 11, 40, and 65 years old. My two teenagers missed their lesson that day, unfortunately, because it would have been great to get a few responses in that age range. Nonetheless, I think the worksheets helped me, as the teacher, to gain perspective.
